About Movement-57

The issue of women and their place in social and political power structure was one of the things under debate and attention after the fall of the Taliban regime. Although the situation of women marginally improved after the fall of the Taliban regime in Afghanistan, domestic and international gender experts considered the country very dangerous for women. This dire situation of women persuaded a number of intellectual women to think about activities to assist women to work for change. This idea was especially reinforced when two of the women traveled to Bangladesh and India for an exposure visit. Visiting a number of women’s movements such as “Ring the Bell” led these women to initiate a similar movement in Afghanistan to work for women to empower them to struggle for their rights and violence mitigation. On returning home, these women visited with more than one hundred women activists from different categories including government employees, teachers, Parliament members, representatives from NGOs, and women from private sectors to share their understanding and opinions with them. This led to the founding of the Movement-57 with more than 50 women activist members on June 2015. Movement-57 was established to promote and protect women’s rights in Afghanistan. The number 57 means WOMAN which comes from ABJAD.
